The term of Henry B. Marchbank, the discount clerk of the defunct Mechanics' Bank, of Newark, who was sentenced for embezzlement, will expire next Sunday. Marchbank was sentenced for five years and gets one year off for good behavior. Marchbank will leave without a cent and his family in Newark is destitute. There is about one hundred dollars in costs against him and till they are paid the law prevents his release. A subscription was started this morning and half of the sum necessary has already been raised. It is believed the costs will be paid so that Marchbank can be home on Sunday.

Rev. Father J. P. Devereux, one of the Dominican priests attached to St. Antoninus' church in Newark, has been assigned the work of founding a new parish in Kansas City, Mo. He will leave for that city in about two weeks. His place here will be supplied by the Rev. P. H. Hartigan, O. P., now at St. Joseph's Convent, Ohio, who formerly was attached to St. Antoninus.

Labor Items.

Twenty-five hundred shoemakers are out on strike in Beverly, Mass. Only one shop is in operation.

The finishers in Martin Wilds' factory at Brockton, Massachusetts, resumed work at an advance of 25 per cent., for which they struck a week ago.

The Assabet Manufacturing Company of Maynard, Massachusetts, which employs about 1,000 operatives in making woolen goods, has given notice of a ten per cent. advance in wages on March 1.

The 2,000 men employed in the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company's shops at Reading, Pennsylvania, were recently notified of an increase of wages in all departments, to begin March 1. The amount of the increase was not announced.

The Newark Daily Advertiser is being boycotted because it chooses to retain certain printers distasteful to the Union. The Advertiser pays higher wages than most other offices but insists on running its own business.

The Ohio House of Representatives have passed Mr. Haley's bill to make 8 hours a legal day's work, but the bill is a sham, as there is no penalty attached to it to enforce its provisions.

A large number of the employees of the Pittsburgh Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad have consented to the employees' relief scheme. Superintendent Picanini says he has received 1,000 applications, "and knows of as many more," making 75 per cent of the force who intend to become members of the association.

The employees of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad shops at Wilmington, Del., this week chose delegates to the conference invited by General Manager Pugh for the discussion of the new relief system. The delegates were instructed "to oppose the relief fund with all their power."

The carpenters and Joiners' Union of Orange, held a meeting this week in Reynolds' building. The attendance was very large and a number of new members were admitted. A committee appointed to visit the boss carpenters and ascertain their opinions in regard to the nine-hour law, reported that all the bosses were in favor of nine hours constituting a day's work, but that here and there, of course, slight opposition was met with. A resolution was passed fixing May 1 as the time for the nine-hour system to go into effect, and the bosses are to be notified of any violation.

A meeting of the Harness, Saddle, Gig, Pad, and Collar-Makers' Association was held at 118 Market street, Newark, Tuesday evening, J. B. Seever, presided and Isaac E. Dodd kept the minutes. About 150 were present and the association is growing rapidly, thirty new members having been enrolled in a week. Speeches were made by John Gill, of the Cigar-Makers' Union; Max Guter, James Craigie and W. T. R. Waldrop, of the Carpenters and Joiners, all of them dwelling upon the benefits of organization. It is desirable to organize the harness makers all over the United States. Thus far the efforts have been attended with great success.

The Prevention of Fires.

FROM A CIRCULAR ISSUED BY THE HOME INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

DEFECTIVE FLUES.—All chimneys and flues should be built of good, sound brick, with double walls, if possible; be started from a solid foundation, and when completed be allowed to settle firmly before being enclosed within a wooden structure. Where this important point is overlooked, the mass of the chimney stack will settle and draw away from that part supported by the roof timbers, and thus leave a dangerous opening at an unfrequented spot. All classes of chimneys and flues should have each course of brick well and evenly bedded in good mortar, and each joint be as carefully pointed inside of the flue as if the work was being done on a pressed brick front. This class of finish is better and safer than the usual method of plastering the inside of a flue, as under the influence of the changes from heat to cold the plaster is liable to drop off and carry with it a share of the mortar, thus leaving a weak spot.

Flues not built from the ground should rest on good timber supports, and have not less than six courses of solid brick work at the base, well bedded and cross-tied in good mortar. Flues built in attics or on joists, with stove-pipe entering them vertically, are very dangerous, and their presence should condemn the risk at once. All timbers and woodwork exposed to chimneys and flues should be framed around them, leaving a two-inch air space. A propitious time for the enforcement of these suggestions is that offered when buildings are about to be erected, and if properly presented to the party at interest, will frequently be adopted. Try it, and when inspecting risks, either as new or old business, keep a sharp eye open to discover and remedy defects, as it is upon your judgment and care in such matters that we must in a very great measure rely for a proper selection of business.

MATCHES.—The careless use of matches is of such general occurrence that frequent caution as to the danger from such cause cannot come amiss, however often reiterated. Metal receptacles should be insisted upon for both burned and unburned matches, and care be taken to keep them out of the reach of children and mice. In the hands of children they are dangerous from the ignorance and inexperience of the users, while with mice they seem to form a dainty addition to their regular diet, and are frequently found imbedded in their nests, with the phosphorus eaten from the ends. The disuse of the so-called "parlor match," a dangerous article, and the more general use of safety matches, such as can be ignited only on boxes prepared for the purpose, should be encouraged on all fitting occasions.

EXPLOSIONS OF LAMPS AND LAMP ACCIDENTS.—The majority of lamp explosions occur from the use of low grade oils, which contain a considerable quantity of naphtha or gasoline, and under the heat generated by the flame in the wick tube, a highly explosive gas is evolved, which, filling the space not occupied by the oil in the font, is liable to find its way to the flame, and upon ignition, cause an explosion. In case no means of exit presents itself, this gas, being subjected to continuous heating, may expand sufficiently to rupture the font itself, and on coming in contact with the flame, ignite with explosive rapidity.

This tendency to generate gas is greatly facilitated through the usual practice of turning low the flame of a lamp, resulting in an unusual heating of the metal dome over the wick, as well as its metallic connections, thus creating an excess of heat and more rapid volatilization of the oil, which engenders a tendency to explosion, even with the use of high grade oils. It should be borne in mind that, while the oil is low in a lamp, the process of capillary attraction through the wick is retarded, and as a result, the heated wick tube acts more rapidly in developing the gas—hence it is always unsafe to use a lamp when the oil is low in it.

Filling and trimming lamps by the aid of artificial light, or filling them when lighted, is extremely dangerous, not to say fool-hardy, as is also, the usual practice of extinguishing the flame by blowing down the chimney.
